This means that the when these particles take away momentum without taking away energy, they will lead conversion of kinetic energy to rest mass energy. 2. When the ZEN particles add momentum without adding energy, they effectively lead to conversion of mass to kinetic energy. 2 3. As these particles exist only for an instance of time but are omnipresent, we think that they might be forming

One of the most important characteristics of energy is

The energy released when gasoline is burned results from differences in the attractive forces between nuclei and electrons in the reactants and products. The kinetic energy of an object is due to the motion of the object and depends on the mass of the object (m) and its velocity (v): $KE = \frac{1}{2}mv^2$. Energy can be converted from one form to another easily.
