The objective of this study is to describe a target water energy food (WEF) nexus domain world including causal linkages and trade-off relationships between WEF resources and their stakeholders, and to develop a WEF nexus system map as an interdisciplinary tool used for understanding the subsequent complexity of WEF nexus systems.

Development-focused debates increasingly employ the water-food-energy-nexus concept as a new perspective to diagnose conflicting sectoral objectives and improve the assessment of large-scale investments in energy, water, or food security. Current frameworks largely approach the nexus from a state-comparative, water-centric perspective.
